

Bio Candace Henry
Director of the Disability Resource Center
Salisbury University

Candace Henry is currently the Director of the Disability Resource Center at Salisbury University where she is responsible for the administrative oversight of the delivery and services provided to qualified students with disabilities. In that role she is also responsible for the development and facilitation of campus-wide disability inclusion/awareness outreach and training initiatives, technical assistance to faculty, staff, and university administration. Candace is also an Adjunct Faculty Member in the College of Health and Human Services at Salisbury University, where she co-developed the University's first Disability Studies minor.

Prior to her current position, Candace spent 9 ½ years as a Transition Technical Specialist for the MSDE's Division of Rehabilitation Services (DORS), working directly with employers to improve the workplace experiences of individuals with disabilities.

She is a member of the National and State branches of the Association on Higher Education and Disability. A member of the Maryland Rehabilitation Association, where she previously served as President, President-Elect, and Secretary. During her term as President of MRA, she served as the Maryland Representative to the Mid-Atlantic Region Board of the National Rehabilitation Association. Candace has dedicated nearly 20 years to advocating with and for individuals with disabilities across the State of Maryland.